

HOW TRUE ARE THESE STATEMENTS?
CHECK ONE BOX BESIDE EACH STATEMENT.

Observation	It's quite common in my experience	It's not that common in my experience
People accept interruptions to keep conversations flowing.
People see interrupting with questions just as inoffensive requests for information.
People expect new comments to relate to the last speaker's comments.
Interrupters often ignore the last speaker's comment.
People define topics gradually and other people don't interrupt.
People are passionate and interrupt often.
People interrupt to talk about side issues.
People stay on topic – no side issue discussion is tolerated.
People use side issues to shape and expand the topic and build relationships.
People interrupt using side issues to shift topics abruptly.
Interrupters persist and offer advice and solutions to their own argument or point of view		